item was in way better condition than expected. The seller got it out in great time. I wanted this book to give to my husband for Valentines Day since it's our first year doing a garden and my mom had this book so I knew it was a good choice. So glad that the seller got this item out in great time. I was able to give it to my husband and now we are working on our garden

It was interesting to read about the different plants that should or shouldn't be planted next to each other but not all types of plants are listed, some very common vegetables and I would've liked a table that listed best and worst companion plants to make it a little quicker guide.

Secrets of companion planting for successful gardening. Vegetables and fruits, like people, have natural friends they prefer to be with--and some they prefer to keep away from. Other plants lure harmful insects away from sensitive plants, the way dill attracts hornworms away from tomatoes. And helpers like garlic will drive Japanese beetles right out of the neighborhood. Getting to know the good and bad companions can double the bounty of your garden.
